E-Verify Is Subject of PA House Hearing

On June 11th, the House Labor Relations Committee heard testimony on a pair of bills that would require Pennsylvania companies engaged in construction work to utilize the e-verify system to confirm that their employees are U.S citizens. House Bills 1502 amends the state procurement law while House Bill 1503 establishes a new law entitled the Commonwealth Industry Employment Verification Act. The hearing was often lively, particularly when the service employees union (SEIU), which opposes the bills, alluded that some of their members were illegal aliens. The state Chamber of Business and Industry joined organizations representing home builders and open shop contractors in testifying against the bills. Representatives of the building trades and the Center for Immigrations studies offered testimony supporting the bills. Based on the questions and answers, it was obvious that the House members on the committee are strongly in favor of the legislation.

Rep. John Galloway, prime sponsor of the measures, stated, "Illegal workers and the dishonest contractors are pushing hard working, skilled Pennsylvanians from the payrolls to the unemployment rolls. This situation undercuts wages and the quality working conditions our workers deserve." He characterized his bills as measures that "will put Pennsylvanians back to work" by making it much harder for employers to intentionally hire illegal aliens because they would require employers to verify their workers' employment eligibility.

The Committee has not yet scheduled a meeting to vote on these two bills.

Business Privilege Tax Bill Awaiting Action In Senate

A bill that would prevent contractors from having to pay the local business privilege tax in any municipality where they have a project is on the move in the Senate. Senate Bill 601 has been rereferred to the Senate Appropriations Committee after previously passing out of the Senate Finance committee. This bill is in reaction to a 2007 State Court ruling that expanded a municipality's ability to tax anyone conducting business within city limits. The State Supreme Court ruling in V.L. Rendina v. Harrisburg found that a contractor can be required to pay the local business privilege tax even if the contractor does not have a permanent office within city limits. As contractors often have construction trailers at job sites, the ruling could cost contractors a great deal of money.

Committee Hears Testimony On Elevator Contractor Licensing

The House Labor Relations committee held a public hearing on legislation that would establish a licensing procedure for companies and individuals engaged in construction, maintenance, inspection or repair of elevators. House Bill 1349, introduced by Representative Tom Killion, places the licensing program under the PA Department of Labor and Industry. The Department already has a program that certifies elevator inspectors, but does not regulate the elevator contractors or constructors. Individuals representing the elevator industry endorsed the bill as did many of the House members who spoke at the hearing. One contractor testified in opposition to the current draft of the bill. The committee is likely to look amending the legislation to find common ground prior to reporting the bill to the full House for consideration.

Committee Votes Along Party Lines On Prevailing Wage Amendment

The Senate Labor and Industry committee approved a bill that would make it more difficult to debar companies that are found guilty of intentionally violating the act. Senate Bill 951 would protect contractors from debarment until the 3rd intentional offence. Although the committee voted to increase penalties for first time violators, the Senators split along party lines on the bill. All Democrats voted against the bill, while the Republicans voted for it.

The prime sponsor of Senate Bill 951, Senator Chuck McIlhinney, explained that his impetus to introduce the bill was the debarment of a company in his district, Worth Construction. The Democratic Chair of the Committee, Senator Tina Tartaglione, argued that companies that violate the law should face serious consequences for intentional violations. The bill was reported out of committee, but it is not expected to be voted by the full Senate. The Senate as a whole is not thought to favor legislation aimed at weakening the Prevailing Wage Act.

Mechanics Lien Law Revisited

The Senate is considering modifications to the PA Mechanic's Lien law which was overhauled in 2006. The currently pending legislation, Senate Bill 563, simply redefines what constitutes "residential" projects. Under the current law, contractors can still waive their lien rights on residential construction contracts worth less than $1 million. Contractors are not permitted to waive their rights on non-residential projects under the law enacted in 2006. Senate Bill 563 redefines "residential" by eliminating the million dollar threshold and replacing it with a new definition that describes a residential project as being any town house or single family dwelling of 3 stories or less not including the basement.

The bill is intended to prevent problems that have occurred at housing developments where the general contractor has gone bankrupt and the subs file liens against the home owners. The bill is expected to be voted on by the full Senate before the Legislature's summer break. While there is no organized opposition to the bill in its current form, several organizations are interested in amending the law to undue some of the changes made in 2006. As a result, the legislation bears close watching.
